

GLENDALE'S SCHOOLS ARE SECOND TO NONE

GLENDALE IS CENTER OF POULTRY RAISING INDUSTRY IN VALLEY

The town of Glendale is the center of what is expected to become one of the valley's best industries—poultry raising. The government poultry farm, one of the two in the country, is situated there, and there are nearly a score of farms in the district which raise chickens as a commercial venture, while fully 85 per cent of the farmers have flocks.

Poultrymen declare the Salt River Valley is unequalled for poultry raising, the long season and mild winters making climatic conditions as nearly ideal as is possible. These climatic conditions materially increase egg production in the winter in comparison with other districts where hens eat much and lay little in cold weather.

Poultry growers of the Glendale district are especially fortunate in being near the government poultry farm, which is now occupying its new site just outside the city limits of the town. The farm was established six miles from Glendale, on the old government ostrich farm, in 1919 for experimental purposes under conditions in the southwest, which are greatly different from those at Beltsville, Maryland, where the other government farm, the largest in the world, is located. Farmers of the entire valley, and for that matter of the entire country, have a standing invitation to visit the Glendale farm at any time, with the assurance that any information desired will be given them.

Business men of Glendale realizing the importance of the farm in developing the poultry industry of the district and valley, in the winter of 1919-1920 began raising funds to buy a site near town and present it to the government. This was done, the deed to the 10-acre tract was presented formally last May, and by December 1 the farm will be completely established in its new quarters, equipment of the most modern type having been installed and the task of moving finished.

The farm, being located on Avenue 18 about a mile south of the heart of the city, is accessible from all parts of the valley by paved roads, a fact which will enable farmers to visit it without waste of time. The poultry station eventually will have 1,000 chickens on it.

Nat E. Luce, superintendent of the farm and a veteran poultryman, yesterday declared there is no reason why poultry raising should not be the most profitable agricultural industry in the valley, taking into consideration cost of production and labor. He estimated that the net profit would average $2 a year for each hen.

"The one big need of the valley so far as poultry goes, is good stock," Mr. Luce said. "Farmers should cull all but the good hens from their flocks, then replace the non-producers with good stock. Good equipment and proper handling is another important point, of course. We are always glad to give assistance and information to poultrymen who visit our station."

Mr. Luce, who came here from California in July, 1920, to take charge of the station, was one of the judges at the eighth annual Maricopa County Poultry Show, now being held at 313 North Central avenue in which a number of fowls from the Glendale district are entered. The government farm has one of the most interesting exhibits at the show.

Poultrymen of the valley always have found a ready market for their products within this state, and the supply has never come near the demand.

The interest which the Glendale district takes in the poultry industry was shown May 26, when a "Chicken Day" celebration was held on the occasion of the presentation of the deed to the new poultry farm site to the government. The following account of the celebration was given in The Republican:

Glendale's "Chicken Day" went over in regular big time style and what is said to be the largest crowd that ever gathered in this district was present, the number being about 4,000. As early as 2 o'clock in the morning the automobiles began to arrive and the crowds began gathering in the park.

The street parade started shortly after 10 o'clock and was the finest display ever seen in the Salt River valley, every kind of article pertaining to the raising and caring for poultry was displayed, the merchants of the town thinking up many novel features. Also along this line a number of business houses put in display windows with live chickens, the Toggery having a miniature poultry run, while the Glendale meat market had a sectional window with a Barred Rock capon mothering a brood of little turkeys. In the other window was a display of the butchers' art in fancy dressing of poultry.

Shortly after the parade the crowd gathered near the band stand and was pleasantly entertained by the band from St. John's mission, the music continuing throughout the lunch hour.

Immediately following the luncheon of chicken sandwiches and coffee, the crowd adjourned to the vicinity of the speaker's platform and the program started at 1 o'clock sharp.

Major C. H. Tinker, who was chairman of the meeting, gave the address of welcome. The deed to the poultry farm was presented by Ernest Hall, secretary of state, who is acting governor. The deed to the farm was accepted by George W. Rommel for the United States government. Harry Lamon next spoke of the greatness of the scope of the poultry industry and the co-operation that the government intended to give to the farm and the community. Dean D. W. Working of the University of Arizona spoke next on the state extension work and the possibilities of the promotion of the poultry industry. The subject of the Glendale farm was taken up by Nat E. Luce, who is in charge of the Glendale farm.

GARAGE HOUSED IN MODERN QUARTERS

The Glendale Garage, one of the largest garages on the north side, was established in 1918, in the building just east of the present site. However, feeling that they could not do adequate work in those cramped quarters, larger ones were built on the corner of First and Grand avenues. The building being completed in 1919, the garage moved there. Larger floor space for storing facilities had been provided, machinery was installed, a complete battery recharging plant erected, and adequate sales and office room provided. In addition to the general garage work the agency for Chalmers and Maxwell cars was taken, as well as a full stock of parts and accessories.

DRUG STORE HAS COURTESY SLOGAN

The Glendale Pharmacy, the oldest drug store in the town, is located on First avenue on one of the main business streets. The firm that now owns the store is composed of James A. and D. R. Jones, the manager of the store being D. R. Jones. Mr. Jones has been engaged in the drug business for a period of 15 years and is thoroughly conversant with the business. The store is most modern in equipment and handles some of the most widely known lines of drugs. In addition to these a full line of sundries, phonographs, jewelry and magazines are stocked. A modern fountain furnishes cooling drinks. Courtesy and honesty is the slogan of the firm.

WOOD'S PHARMACY STARTED IN 1919

The Woods' Pharmacy was opened for business in May, 1919, by C. M. Woods. The store is most modernly equipped and carries a full line of drugs, sundries, magazines and operates an up-to-date fountain. Mr. Woods is a graduate pharmacist and has had much experience in the drug business. Previous to coming to Glendale he was for a number of
